'Local Color' Scores Hit; Play to Capacity Houses

By FRANCES HOLLIDAY

Deviating from the beaten path of spoken drama presentation, the Strollers, University dramatic organization, opened their first musical comedy production, "Local Color," Monday night at the Guignol theater, for a three-night engagement. "Local Color" was written and directed by Frank Davidson, president of Strollers, in collaboration with Earl King Senft and Katherine Davis, who composed the musical scores and lyrics.

Linking a heterogeneous collection of characters and numbers into a flowing chain of drama, the plot moved through the evening from the home of the Lumpkins to the living room of the Alpha Kappa fraternity house and back in the third act to the Lumpkins home. Charming interspersed with choruses by co-eds and fraternity men, who enlivened the acting with their singing. The comedy was quite a successful amateur production.

Mrs. Lumpkins, the indulgent mother of Tommie and Flora Bell, engagingly portrayed by Evelyn Gall; "Topsy" Tuggle, the proverbial fraternity lover of "wine, women, and song" with the emphasis on the wine, aptly played by Russell Steigler; and Tommie Lumpkins, around whom the play centered, and who was possessed of a powerful ego, cleverly enacted by Elbert Bell, were played with great dramatic ability.

A particular note of praise must be sounded for the musical numbers and the dancing of the choruses. The scores of the various songs were excellent in composition, melody, and rhythm, and the lyrics were lulling and light, as befitted those of collegiate men and women.

The dancers seemed to possess a certain natural grace, which emanated from the dances.

"Mother of Mine," sung by Tommie, Elbert Bell, to his mother, touched the hearts of the audience as mother songs will, when sung as beautifully as this one. The grand finale was eminently clever and certainly novel.

DEBATING TEAM TO TOUR SOUTH

Forensic Squad Will Engage in 20 Meets With Southern Universities Early in January.

The University debating team will leave Lexington on New Year's eve for a tour of the South, during which they will participate in twenty or more debates with several Southern Universities, returning to Lexington on January 13.

After leaving Lexington, the first stop will be at Atlanta, Ga., where nine debates will be held with Embury University on the following questions: "Resolved That War Cannot be Prevented by International Agreements; Resolved That the Single Enterprise Cannot Compete With the Chain Store; Resolved That Big Business and Good Government Cannot be Harmonized."

At Green Water, Fla., they will meet the team of Rollins College on the same three questions, and will debate nine times before different audiences.

There will be only one debate with the team representing the University of Florida, at Gainesville. The team representing the University question for discussion with the Florida team probably will be: "Resolved That War Cannot be Prevented by International Agreements."

Professor Sutherland will take with him five members of the University team. They are Wm. Pearce, James Porter, Hugh Jackson, Clifford Amyn, and Sydney Schell.

The more important debates of the year will be held next semester. Mr. Sutherland said yesterday. Debates have already been arranged with Princeton, Swathmore, Loyola, and Harvard. The questions discussed with these schools will be similar to, if not the same ones used this semester. The debates before the high school groups by the University teams have been largely in the nature of preparatory work for the larger and more important meets next year.

The Women's Athletic Association of the University is sponsoring its annual Kid Party tonight at 8:15 o'clock in the recreation room of Patterson Hall. All girls are cordially invited to attend dressed in kid costumes.

SECOND TILT OF YEAR EXPECTED TO EXTEND BLUE

Opponents Noted for Strong Teams in Ohio Conference Basketball Circles

MAUER TO PRESENT STRONGEST LINEUP

Players Practice Diligently on Offensive Formations for Encounter

By LAURENCE SHROPSHIRE
With the joyous spirit of Christmas prevailing the atmosphere and Santa Claus himself expected to be among the spectators, the University of Kentucky Wildcats will take the second step on their venture through the beckoning realms of basketball fairland Friday night at 8 o'clock in the Men's gymnasium. The big, red quintette from Miami University at Oxford, Ohio, will also be among those present when Coach Johnny Mauer and his boys open their Yuletide bundles of thrills and excitement.

A light repast consisting of the Georgetown Tigers was disposed of last week by the 'Cats to the merry tune of 46 to 9 and now they are whetting the old carving knife for a more bounteous banquet, a choice morsel of holiday vestige which will, if achieved, boost Kentucky's stock to great heights in gumshoe circles. But the paramount question at present in the minds of several thousand fans in the Blue Grass is whether the Wildcats have broken off a bite too large to be chewed. Can they digest this blazing plum pudding or will they wilt before the oppressive heat of the invaders.

The Miami approach is heralded, not by the swift pacing of St. Nick's traditional reindeer, nor even by the steadily roaring motor of an aircraft in which he is reported to be traveling now, but by an ominous tread. Nothing is known of the actual fighting strength of the Ohians but unpleasant are the memories of last year's epic battle with this same team.

A red menace came out of the north in December 1928 to interrupt the Christmas festivities of the bounding boys in Blue. This they did with much gusto. The tally was deadlocked at the final whistle and the game continued. After three overtime periods of brilliant floorwork, during which time the full house of spectators sat in breathless suspense and gnawed on trembling fingers, the Kentucky five won with a meager 43 to 42 margin.

MEDICAL BOOKS GIVEN TO U. K.

Fayette County Medical Group and Professor Miller Give Valuable Books to University Library.

Two gifts of books, made recently to the University library, one through the department of hygiene from the Fayette County Medical Society and the other from the library of the late Prof. A. M. Miller, were announced at a meeting of the library committee held last week.

The Fayette County Medical society donated a set of 386 bound and unbound volumes of medical journals to the hygiene department last spring, which have been turned over to the library, while 17 bound volumes, 28 pamphlets, and a variety of material which has not been unpacked have been sent to the library from the A. M. Miller estate.

These additional volumes added to the library list will be transferred, together with the books now contained in the present library, to the new library building, the first unit of which is now under construction on the campus.

Phi Mu Alpha Holds Initiation Services

The members of the fraternity are: Gene Royce, Iman Fort, Eldon Durand, Ray Mays, Norman Hainsley, Claude Walker, Earl Senft, Robert Goad, Gayle Hamon, Lawrence Alexander, Wilbur Wortman, and David Young. Faculty members are: E. G. Sulzer, C. A. Lampert, and L. C. Robinson.

STUDENTS HEAR PRESIDENT M'VEY

Speaks Before Convocation Assembly Wednesday in Memorial Hall; Scores Activities at School.

President Frank L. McVey addressed the student body of the university Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock in Memorial Hall, for the regular monthly convocation of the school. Dr. A. W. Fortune opened the program with prayer, while music was furnished by the University Glee Club, under the direction of Prof. Carl Lampert, head of the music department.

In his address President McVey made an appeal to students to cooperate in an attempt to keep the campus clean and beautiful. Attention was called to the rule against smoking in the buildings. Dr. McVey said that for some time it has been called to his attention that there is a large amount of graft, special privilege, and corruption in the various student organizations. The appropriating of student funds for the private use of individuals holding positions of trust and responsibility should be stopped by members of the student body.

Dr. McVey said that the university has had a most successful football season and that our football men deserve a great deal of credit for the right course of training that they have kept. The players are sportsmen and gentlemen, which cannot be said for the student body as a whole. Evidences of ungentlemanly and unkindly conduct among Kentucky students were particularly noticed on the Lexington, Va. football trip, said President McVey. Deportment such as this gives the university a bad name and will eventually lead to the abolishing of intercollegiate football unless the clear thinking and serious element of the student body take it upon themselves to remedy the conditions. These conditions can be remedied through the discipline of fraternities and sororities and the intelligent action of the student body.

President McVey closed his address by saying that a spirit of intellectual curiosity should exist among the students at the university and that many of the students here are "fugitives from knowledge."

The men's glee club sang two numbers after the address, and the benediction was pronounced by Dr. Fortune, pastor of the Central Christian church.

Merry Christmas

Holiday Season Greetings Are Extended by Kernel Staff

Today's issue of The Kernel is the last that will be issued during the year of 1929. When school reopens in January we will have a brand new year. The Kernel takes this opportunity to extend to every student of the University wishes for a Merry Christmas and a very Happy New Year.

Dr. O. T. Koppius Addresses Meeting of Chemical Group

Dr. O. T. Koppius, professor of physics at the University, delivered an address on "Geophysical Methods of Prospecting for Oil Deposits" at the 138th regular meeting of the Lexington section, American Chemical Society, Tuesday, December 10. After the meeting, which was attended by about 75 persons, Dr. Frank E. Tuttle, head of the department of chemistry, was elected counselor of the Lexington section. Dr. Koppius recently returned from Texas, where he investigated several problems of a geophysical nature. He pointed out in his address that the haphazard prospecting and drilling for oil as carried out in the beginning of the industry is being replaced by more precise methods, many of which are the direct result of geologists' and physicists' interest in the work.

Instructors Speak To Horticulturists

Prof. A. J. Olney and W. W. Magill, instructors in the College of Agriculture, spoke at the annual winter meeting of the Kentucky State Horticultural society, which closed last Saturday at the University experiment station.

Professor Olney, in his address to the group Saturday morning, spoke on raspberry growing, and stressed the importance of that fruit where proper cultural methods are employed. W. W. Magill outlined a spray program for Kentucky growers.

Walter W. Hillenmeyer, of Lexington, was reelected president of the society. Dr. H. Van Antwerp, of Farmers, and Wood F. Axton, of Louisville, were chosen vice presidents of their respective sections.

COURTESY

(By Wilbur G. Frye, Edwards M. Templin, Roy H. Owsley)

How sweet and gracious, even in common speech;

Is that fine sense which men call Courtesy!
Wholesome as air and genial as light,
Welcome in every clime as breath of flowers,
It transmutes aliens into trusting friends,
And gives its owner passport round the globe.

Thus wrote James T. Fields. He spoke of courtesy in the practical interpretation of the word and not in a poetic hallucination that his words perchance would come true in the dim ages when unpreparedness to do those things one ought to prepare against would find the timid few without an idea of that which he wrote.

Thus spoke the soul of a man who knew from experience just how rare a true sense of courtesy is to be found in those with whom we deal daily, and of whom we expect the same attitude as has been extended before in a certain set of similar circumstances.

It can be seen that those poetic words may mean something even today when the march of higher civilization connotes in the no longer savage breast some of the finer feelings that were found lacking in the days when despotism reigned supreme, and which, because it did reign in that exalted position, felt that there should be no end to the evil deeds dared to be done.

And again, Milton has written in that far-seeing vision blessed with true insight into men rather than material things:

Shepherd, I take thy word
And trust thy honest offer'd courtesy,
Which oft is sooner found in lowly sheds
With smoky rafters, than in tap'stry halls,
And courts of princes.

Thus again it can be seen that courtesy is a tone of character that one finds in the least expected places, and fails to find in those whom one has been taught to honor and revere as persons incapable of emanating the faintest stigma from within that aura of chaste beneficence.

In so far as possible, The Kernel long has tried to be courteous, and if a retort were needed, to make the retort courteous. It long has been inclined to drape foul places with kind words as a sort of soothing balm for wounds whose edges time has failed to heal with ointment courteously placed thereon.

This week The Kernel is publishing a special edition for the sole purpose of being courteous. The capable business manager of The Kernel, in his laudable zeal to produce a bigger and better paper, oversold advertisements to men who were depending on his word that they would be published and brought to the attention of the student body of the University. Last week's paper could not carry all of these advertisements, so it became necessary at the last moment to produce another paper from the tired brains of the editors, who have labored long and unceasingly in their efforts to promote the interests of The Kernel. Disappointment of the advertisers was not to be considered, since they have given the paper enough space this year, on the average, to show more than seventy per cent of the total space available, thus forcing the exclusion of University news that should have been printed.

In all the years that The Kernel has been issued at the University of Kentucky, there has never been an issue before the Christmas holidays which carried a date later than December 14, because the departmental heads, staff and editors realized that even a journalist is entitled to that rest that may be found even in lowly shed with smoky rafters. It was thought for a time that such honest offer'd courtesy as had been extended in the past to the publication on this campus, which is alleged to be a paper by and for students of the University, would be courteously extended again from the court of princes.

But it did not materialize! And the type slaves have been hard at it again, working so that others may fill their coffers with the luscious fruit which to some is as welcome as air and genial as light, as the breath of flowers. And no wonder! As Fields says, it gives its owner passport round the globe.

But it is to be hoped that a moral lesson will be learned from it. To the students of the University, to the members of the faculty, and to those of you who read and are neither, this issue connotes courtesy. It is a monument to the things friends will do for each other. It is a tribute to the tie that binds the three heads of The Kernel. This is the motto of the three, written by Cowper:

A moral sensible, and well-bred man
Will not affront me, no other can.

Life is not so short but that there is time enough for courtesy (Emerson). The three of us have found it that way, even at the expense of a much needed vacation from the arduous duties of the day. But let us look at the other side of it for a moment!

There is always a positive and a negative pole to everything existing in the world, whether it be temporal or incorporeal. So far, the positive side of it has been discussed. Let us think what shame would descend upon us if there were a lack of the positive. Let us ponder over the results of negation. There is hardship, and worry, and demoralization, and lost faith in those things or persons we trust. As it so aptly has been expressed in Cymbeline.

Dissembling Courtesy! How fine this tyrant
Can tickle where she wounds!

Although there is far more than that to the negative side of it, The Kernel does not want to discuss it, in as much as it destroys finer ideas about the graciousness of it, even in common speech.

So we come to the end with a thought for all who read these lines, and between them—take home over this Christmas vacation a resolve to be fair with Courtesy and to treat her as if she were more precious than gold and the gossamer webs of endeavor. Let there come into the heart a fine regard for others and their properties, and let that feeling be instilled so deeply into the problems of everyday life that there will be no commands leading directly to a total disregard for the existence and maintenance of true Courtesy.

COOPERATION

It has been truthfully said that no organization is stronger than its weakest link and this fact is no less true of the Kentucky Kernel than any other campus organization. It is indeed a sad plight when individual members of an organization see fit to oppose the policies which are conscientiously outlined by the persons who have worked with unceasing zeal without remuneration for the betterment of any activity.

Certainly executives of a campus activity, who are called upon to sacrifice valuable time which might be very effectively applied to their studies, are anxious to see the fruits of their labor materialize and without cooperation from the least helper, not to mention the more important ones, the outlined plans will fall short of their goal.

Thus, looking toward the opening of a new year, The Kernel feels that members of every University activity or organization should pledge themselves to continued labor and better cooperation with their fellow workers. Especially should the departmental heads seek to cooperate with the students in their department who have demonstrated their desire to make Kentucky a bigger and better University.

CREDIT IS DESERVED

The Kernel has been on the University campus since the Journalism department was established in 1915. Before that time, the student publication was known as The Idea. Students of the University always have published The Kernel, aided by commanding oracles, and their work has gone without recognition. Of course, it is an honor to be on the staff, but most other activities on the campus receive some credit or recognition.

Members of the staff have labored countless hours on The Kernel. All that they have received for their efforts is some experience and quite a bit of unfavorable criticism from the faculty and students. Why is it that staff members do not receive credit for the work they do? It would be in keeping with the extra amount of effort expended for the sole purpose of promoting the interest of the paper, and through the paper, the interests of the University.

The student who majors in journalism and never looks in The Kernel newsroom is graduated from the University with credit for just as much work in journalism as the student who attends the same classes and spends the greater part of his spare time seeing that The Kernel is published each week. Often he does this to the detriment of the grades received in his class work.

Many students spend from six to twelve hours per week on The Kernel, which is more than the average student spends on any three-hour course; yet, the member of The Kernel staff works on with only the expectation of hearing or receiving some praise for his efforts. The most likely reward that the staff will receive is credit for the mistakes which are their fault, in many instances. The boys and girls who devote their time and attention to the accredited student publication should have some credit for the work done, the more especially since time spent on the paper could be used in preparing class assignments.

CHRISTMAS GREETINGS

December 20, the day that we have long looked forward to for so many long weeks. At noon tomorrow we will be released for two glamorous weeks of vacation, but then we must return to bondage January 3, and labor all the more diligently to make up for those two weeks of playtime.

Hear ye, all of you who attend the University and hearken unto what the Kernel says. Let not the beauty and sparkle of the windows down in town beguile you into cutting the last hour before the vacation, for remember it has the dire penalty of the loss of one-tenth of your final standing. Also contemplate that the first hour after the vacations has the same fine, so don't allow any charmingly seductive voices at home persuade you to anything that you know that you shouldn't do.

The Kernel wishes to point out to all of you the deeper side of Christmas. Some 2,000 years ago a little baby was born in a manger, shepherds watching in the fields saw and marveled at the star of Bethlehem moving. They followed it and came unto the stable in which the Christ Child was born. Travelers came from afar bringing precious gifts to the babe in swaddling clothes. Without this birth, Christmas would have never been.

Had it not have been for the works of this great man, in what condition would we all be today? He brought light into the world with His coming and left it here after He had to leave His earthly home. We have our personal rights and freedom given to us from a government which is founded upon the Bible text.

MERRY CHRISTMAS TO YOU ALL AND A HAPPY NEW YEAR!

THE DUTY OF STUDY

Students Are Obligated to Develop Scholasticism

In a certain old book which is not as much read as it deserves, there is a cry: "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge," and "My people do not think. My people do not consider."

In that same excellent volume there is given as part of the highest duty of man: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God . . . with all thy mind." Now these words bring to many undergraduates, even those who call themselves Christians, a distinct shock of surprise. We have thought of our Christian duty as being confined to holding in rein our passions, to playing fair on the athletic field and in college activities, to being honest in the examination room, possibly to doing something constructive for the college, and to planning our life work unselfishly. If we maintain a passing grade or at least an average stand in the class room, we felt we have done all that can be asked. No one would deny that the above are Christian virtues nor would any sensible person advocate anything but their reinforcement. However, the student's main occupation during his college days is supposed to be concerned with the curriculum and he has not yet faced his life straight who has not asked what his attitude toward it should be.

It must be confessed that the usual height of the undergraduate's scholarly ambition is to "get by." His measure of achievement in a course is the grade he gets in it. If he obtains a moderate stand he usually is satisfied and if he achieves a high stand, providing, of course, that he has done it honestly, he feels virtuous. He sees nothing incongruous in neglecting his "studies" for some absorbing extra-curriculum activity.

No one who knows American college life would claim that a well rounded education is to be acquired by the exclusive devotion of one's time to the class room, the library and the laboratory. Some of the finest lessons are learned through the athletic field, the college newspaper, the debating forum, the fraternity house, the midnight discussions in which everything from the college faculty to the administration of the universe is brought ruthlessly to judgment—all these are a valuable part of the educative process. The fact remains, however, that the student is supposed to be spending the major part of his time on the curriculum and that the curriculum has as its purpose the development in the student of scholarly habits, in giving him a basis of facts, in telling him how and where to find more of them, and in teaching him how to use them.

The undergraduate who really sees what his Christian faith demands will then seek during his college course to cultivate scholarly habits. He may never become distinguished for his attainment, but he will have sought to acquire the methods and the attitude of a scholar. He will in the first place be honest. He will beware of the subtler forms of dishonesty such as bluffing and studying just enough to "get by." He will try to regard the faculty not as taskmasters for whom he is to do as little work as is possible, but as guides in the search for knowledge. He will think of assignments as suggestions for arriving at truth and beauty and not as unpleasant duties to be gotten through as soon as possible. He will, too, hold grades in esteem only in so far as they indicate the teacher's estimate of his work. Grades, honorary activities, prizes and scholarships are concessions to the weaknesses of human nature and the sooner a man has gotten to the point where he subordinates them to the attainment of real scholarship, the sooner will he cease to be superficial.

It must be sadly acknowledged that only a few, even of our teachers, approximate the ideal scholar. That does not vitiate the fact, however, that the ideal is Christian and the one that we should seek to attain. For it those who are known as the "leading Christian students" on the campus ought to stand. As they do so, they will find themselves emerging from the ranks of those for whom tasks are set, either by their teachers or by their employers after graduation, into the "glorious liberty of children of God."—Kenneth Scott, Latourette.

DREAD DISEASE FOUGHT BY DIET

Success Crowns Research of Twenty-five Years Amid Sneers and Evasions of Colleagues

Berlin.—The fight against tuberculosis seems at last to have found a real weapon, a simple treatment by diet which has been tried out and proved highly efficient. Dr. Max Gerson, a doctor in Bielefeld, in this youth suffered from very severe attacks of biliousness, and seeking a remedy he hit upon an entirely meatless and saltless diet. He cured himself in a very short time, and continuing the beneficial diet, later added small doses of chalk to his food.

Colleagues Sneered

For twenty-five years Max Gerson worked to perfect his diet, receiving no encouragement or support from colleagues or hospitals, sneered at as the "vegetable doctor," until in 1924, Professor Sauerbruch, one of Germany's most celebrated physicians, became interested. He sent his two assistants, Professors Schinde and Hermannsdorfer, to examine the patients treated by Dr. Gerson. Their report was such that Dr. Sauerbruch, then in Munich, decided to take up the cudgels for Dr. Gerson's method himself.

In the hospitals the success was gratifying. Patients often terribly affected were willing to do anything that offered even the dream of rescue. They had to adhere strictly to the not very palatable diet, being watched with lynx eyes by Professor Hermannsdorfer and his wife, who was then in charge of the hospital kitchen and has been and still is his assistant in the fight. The greatest care had to be taken to prevent fond but foolish relatives from smuggling in the coveted sausages or beer which destroyed the benefit derived from the cure.

In order to tempt specially difficult patients to eat, Mrs. Hermannsdorfer compiled a cookerybook, in which one can find many ways of making food comparatively savory without any addition of salt, pepper, or other spice. Tea, alcohol and coffee are only permitted in small quantities in milk, thus giving the patient an illusion rather than a taste of the coveted stimulus.

Oranges and the juice of lemons, tomatoes, raw salads, steamed vegetables are the chief part of the diet, all salted meats, ham, smoked fish, etc., are forbidden entirely; 100 grams of fresh meat are permitted thrice a week, but a patient who can make up his mind to do without it entirely will recover the sooner. Dr. Gerson's theory is that a sick body is a body in which poison has been allowed to get the upper hand and that as soon as the poison is eliminated the body will start a successful fight against the invisible enemies in his blood. Results have seemed to confirm the theory—which is not limited to him. In cases of bone tuberculosis the treatment has to be strictly carried out for at least a year; lupus, about six to ten months. A patient suffering from tuberculosis of the kidneys, eyes or tongue must live according to Gerson's diet all his life.

Tuberculosis of the intestines, the stomach and the peritoneum have been cured surprisingly quickly, and generally the rigors of diet in such cases may later on be considerably relaxed.

YOU CAN'T BEAT THE PAUSE THAT REFRESHES

IT HAD TO BE GOOD TO GET WHERE IT IS

By C. E. BARNES

With the holiday season here and most of us entirely burned out by the pressure of last minute activities, we find ourselves called upon again to supply material suitable for the leisurely perusal of those who care for the weak minded sections, and at a time when our gentle readers have little or no patience with the caustic comments of one who has only a single ambition right now: "to fold the drapery of his couch about him and lie down to pleasant dreams."

We still possess a certain portion of our infantile cupidry when it comes to Santa Claus. While we're not expecting any of those presents for ourselves, we're so imbued with the old Christmas spirit that we'd like to cooperate with the old gentleman from the Northland long enough to suggest certain little trifles that we believe our friends would enjoy.

First of all, we hope old Santa Claus brings Nina Budd a great big doll—for Henderson Dysard, "Bridge in Ten Easy Lessons"—for Jim Chapman, an alarm clock so he can make his eight o'clocks—for "Sunny" Allen, a new book, "Woman in Business"—for Mina Pate, a popular treatise by Dorothy Dix entitled "Get Your Man"—for Joe Allen, plenty of Christmas spirit (He'll need it after struggling through his dramatic activities)—for Hubert Willis, "The Private Life of No. 7"—and for Jock Finley, plenty of interesting company while he recuperates from the unavoidable loss of a worn out vermiform appendix.

We were talking to somebody the other day and he remarked a particular girl was a "man's woman." Since then we've had occasion to wonder many times just what kind of a combination of feminine attributes a man's woman would be. We confess that to date we haven't met one. With all the modern tendency toward conservatism in dress, manners, and talk, the feminine element doesn't quite measure up to the standard that we've arbitrarily established after some little thought on the matter.

In our opinion a man's woman ought to be a lot better psychologist than she will permit anybody to understand. She will take a man's worst faults and through her superior ability to flatter him will make him believe that that particular fault is his most worthy attribute. She should be intelligent enough to make the world believe she is fashionably dumb. She ought to have a peculiar knack of understanding what is expected of her—and doing something else. There's nothing like the element of surprise to make one interesting. She ought to know much about dress, and seek constantly the advice of her masculine admirers about the kind of clothes that she should wear. (They will thereby feel flattered and she will thus have something to talk about.) She should be able to disseminate much of the valuable information that is to be gotten from a cursory contact with life without becoming cynical. She would be more interesting if she would create the impression that she is a bountiful mixture of the devil and the angels—without actually being either of them. And if we're not asking too much, we'd like her to be just a little bit congenial so far as the opposite sex are concerned. Aside from these elemental qualities, our idea of a man's woman would not be especially damaged if we should discover, at a point too late to withdraw, that her daddy had made a few millions in oil and that she was the sole claimant!

Oh, yes, we haven't aired our pet gripe yet. We can well sympathize with the gentleman who said that he had been paddling around in the mud for so long that he was getting web feet. Truly old Jupiter Pluvius is overdoing himself in seeing that all the green things on earth (no reference to freshmen) are provided with a plentiful precipitation.

We're just about ready to start a new game. We haven't named it yet, but the idea is to hurdle the puddles of water that stand in nice, inviting pools on the various campus sidewalks. If you can hurdle a puddle of water without getting your feet wet, you win the prize. (Try and get it). If you can't hurdle the puddle, you're all wet. An' that's that!

After standing by this long, we wish you a Merry Christmas and a sloppy New Year.

Go West, Young Man! Go West! Says Student Who Traveled During Summer

By Jess Laughlin

So many people in this man's country had a convention of one kind or another in California last summer that it has begun to appear that unless one can indifferently say, "Oh yes, we had a convention in Los Angeles last summer," one really doesn't belong.

Travel is broadening. To that everyone will agree. And, for the benefit of those who haven't yet heeded the lure of romantic California, here is a somewhat condensed resume of places of interest and itinerary of travel that should prove of inestimable value.

If one should leave Lexington in June or July as did several of our pioneers last summer, one might absorb some of the hospitality of the old South at Memphis. Leaving Memphis, one hears of the "Broadway of America" which winds round and round about, and sometimes under parts of Arkansas. For flowery names for roads that are more or less bottomless pits "when it rains" Arkansas gets the prize lemon. In fact, after one has hypnotized his conscience as stayed a day in seeing the baths that are supposed to cure everything from falling hair to fallen arches, you hustle and hurry over to Texarkana to see where we get our "midnight oil" (and gas).

In Texas if one gets up early in the morning, one might get a good view of a distant mountain or city that might possibly be reached by nightfall. Dallas, being on the line of travel, is of course viewed with interest. Dallas, you know, is the city near Fort Worth. Fort Worth achieved prominence some years, or was it decades ago, when some fliers flew and flew and flew. They made what was then familiarly known as an endurance record.

Ah, now after about a five-hundred-mile run over from Fort Worth trees once more put in an appearance. The cottonwoods shower all who drive the long shaded approach to El Paso. The city itself is vitally interesting with its cosmopolitan air of Old Mexico and New America, combining the artistry and self-satisfaction of the neighboring Mexicans with the business and cleanliness of the Americans.

Of course with such a "watering place" as Juarez just across the Rio Grande, no one should miss such a rare opportunity to associate the past with the present. Juarez has practically all of the vices of the infamous Tia Juana with few of its virtues. If anything, Juarez is the more picturesque of these examples of Mexican assistance to American prohibition.

Soldiers with uniforms that drape grotesquely stand on the main streets stupidly staring at the Americans who are out of the states for a lark. At times a caballero rides in from the sandy wastes to slake his thirst and eye the señoritas who gaze at his grandness from behind dark gratings.

The backwardness of the Mexican is the reason for his still achieving the romantic.

If one has not seen enough of forbidden wild life after having left El Paso and Juarez, one includes Tia Juana, not far south of San Diego. Of course some people's capacities differ. To wit: A certain couple of well known campus heroes who graduated here last year. Of course anyone who has read that particular edition of the Kernel last summer knows that the two such upright, outstanding young men as these were, should sue the Mexican government for slander for suggesting such a thing as smuggling a few bottles across the border.

It is cold in San Diego, so after seeing the naval air base and the bay, the trip is made to the mecca of conventionists, Los Angeles.

While in Los Angeles everyone gets the yen to see as much of the movie colony as possible. Naturally the college boy must rate a date with a movie actress to satisfy his ego and have something with which to lord it over the brothers when he returns.

Grauman's Chinese Theatre with its oriental air of mystery is something unlike anything in the world. In the forecourt there are prints of feet and hands of most of the prominent stars who placed their testimonials there in wet concrete when the theatre was being built.

The new city building of Los Angeles is one of the most artistic pieces of architecture since the style in pyramids has taken the country's eye.

Wilshire Boulevard where the limit is fifty miles or over, and where there are surprisingly few smash-ups.

Hollywood with its huge studio lots, its Spanish bungalows perched high like nests on craggy mountain-sides. Car coming and going, everywhere. For unless one has a swanky new car in Hollywood one doesn't rate, no matter what other qualifications. Even if his great aunt was a D. A. R.

Santa Monica and Long Beach with its ocean bathing beaches, the well remembered amusement parks at Venice and Ocean Park. The Cocoanut Grove where the movie folk do quite a bit of their dancing. The Biltmore with Earl Burmet's orchestra and the inimitable Biltmore Trio singing. Catalina Island where the inhabitants kid the passengers when they disembark from the steamers, the flying fish of the Pacific Coast, the huge, hulking hulls of battleships lying majestically offshore while the gobs enjoy shore leave, the Uplifters Ranch in the heart of Hollywood and Santa Monica where Will Rogers has his polo team, the mansions of the stars who command salaries much in excess of the president, all of these things make a trip to the far west most enjoyable.

San Francisco with its Golden Gate, its sinister Chinatown, up and down streets, the cold weather in summer, its air of commerce, sailors of all descriptions walking the streets, swearing, blustering, out for adventure.

What stories could be told in this city of contrasts. As Horace Greely said, "Go West, Young Man!" And now there is a lot more to see than when that famous statement was first made.

PAWN YOUR CARS.

So many Parisians have taken to pawning their automobiles that the municipal pawnshop has been compelled to refuse them until it builds a new 600-car garage. With the low rate of interest charged by the municipal pawnshop and the high rates of Paris garages, it is cheaper to pawn than to park. Parisians even put the car "up the spout" on Monday morning and take it out on Saturday night.—Los Angeles Examiner.

BOORROWERS.

There's the gink who owes for food. The man who owes for drink; The chap who owes for fancy clothes Or for the kitchen sink.

Some owe for six-tube radios (Alas, and so do I); Some owe for snappy roadsters which Make midnight oil run high.

All these may be forgiven, yes. For gotten, too, we know; But the meanest man keeps your mower Till time to shovel snow.

JOSEPH SCHILDKRAUT

Of 'Show Boat' Fame

All Song and Dialog

Through the ever alert editorial staff of this journal this department suffered quite a few blatant errors last week. I had selected twelve motion pictures as being the most outstanding during the year 1929 which had been shown in Lexington and they thought it best to only print seven and let you guess at the rest. However, it is best that we state them all so here they are and I trust that those benevolent individuals will be so generous as to allow them to be published:

"In Old Arizona." William Fox picture. All talking.

"The Man Who Laughs." Universal picture. Silent.

"The Broadway Melody." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture. All talking.

"The Letter." Paramount picture. All talking.

"Alibi." United Artists picture. All talking.

"The Dance of Life." Paramount picture. All talking.

"Show Boat." Universal picture. Part talking.

"Buildup Drummond." United Artists picture. All talking.

"The Hollywood Revue." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture. All talking.

"The Cocoanuts." Paramount picture. All talking.

"Hallelujah." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture. All talking.

"The Trespasser." United Artists picture. All talking.

—TLR—

These twelve, in my estimation, are highly representative of the kaleidoscopic changes the screen has undergone and are all pictures that I would like to see again.

—TLR—

Which reminds me of two return engagements that Lexington had this week at the Ben Ali theater: namely, Will Rogers the first two days and "The Cockeyed World" the rest of the week. I enjoyed seeing both of these again and only wish that the local theaters would practice this system more often.

—TLR—

Another gross error in this column last week that I stated that it was the last issue of the paper this year. Since seeing that in print I learned that we would have one this week countermarching the former executive order. All of which means that my last week's drivel should have run this week. Maybe they wouldn't have botched it all to pieces had I waited.

—TLR—

It is with a feeling of mortification that I admit that Lexington cannot appreciate a stock company even though it be of the high calibre of the Alney Albs Players who closed here Saturday night to open afresh in an Ohio city. For over two months they gave us consistently good plays in a creditable manner only to find that we didn't give a hang whether we had any legitimate drama or not. Which, it must be said, looks mighty bad for Lexington, once known to have a community of intelligent playgoers.

—TLR—

One of the biggest ideas the screen has ever had comes to life in "The Great Gabbo" on exhibition at the Strand now. Although somewhat straggled in direction and continuity the story is so original that it is a rare treat to see it. The acting of Erich Von Stroheim is superb and the dance numbers are equal, I think, to those in "The Hollywood Revue"

—TLR—

One young lady asked me what the Strand was showing this week and was told "The Great Gabbo," she obviously became all awither and, in her most knowing manner asked: "What's she playing in?" Where's that baseball bat?

—TLR—

On the local silver sheet this week "Sweetie" was terrible; "The Mighty" is swell dramatic fare; "Broadway Scandals" was pitiful and the return of Al Jolson in "Say It With Songs" is little better than an insult. "The Great Gabbo" closes today and "The Cockeyed World" is being run the rest of the week. The Strollers had a popular success in "Local Color" and the Ada Meade and Orpheum are still clicking with their respective clientele so I suppose the rialto of Lexington is in customary form. At least it is safe until I begin roaming it again after the Christmas holidays.

Two generations ago the chief rural holidays were the Fourth of July, the Grange picnics, the circus, and the county fair.

Miss Louise Ottenback and Miss Susan Cook, of the Beta Sigma Omicron sorority, spent the week-end at Miss Ottenback's home in Louisville.

BASKETBALL

THE SIDELINES By JOHN MAUER
UNIVERSITY OF KENTUCKY COACH

THE THREE-LANE OFFENSE

This type of offense is used considerably because it embodies the natural playing habits any group of boys would adopt if left to go their natural way. It is primarily a fast breaking offense and not very difficult to master. The fundamentals used include the push pass, push chest shot, high dribble and one-handed short shot. No definite type of men are required, although the coach will naturally favor a tall forward, center and guard to go with his small, quick forward and guard.

The offensive break in this type is similar to the long pass with the exception that the pass is made to an outlet forward rather than a man spotted deep in offensive territory. If the man to man defense is used in conjunction with this attack the outlet forward will cover the back guard on the opposing team. This allows him to be spotted farther out on the floor because the back guard very seldom goes in deep on offense. As he receives the ball he either dribbles down the sidelines or passes to the center breaking down the middle. The center in turn may pass to the opposite forward or back to the man who made the original pass to him. The ball is carried down the floor by this quick method of passing, all of the men staying in their respective lanes, until they converge at the basket. Here the ball is passed to a shot and the other two men rebound if the shot is missed. The floor guard trails the three offensive men and is in a position to receive a backward pass if the three offensive men find it impossible to penetrate the defense. The idea in this method of attack is again based on the theory of getting more offensive men into scoring territory than there are defensive men.

If the slow method of attack is used the ball is advanced into offensive territory by the floor guard. When he is stopped by a defensive man he may pass to any one of the three offensive men stationed at the middle of the floor. Similar to the positions assumed in the fast break the forwards are located at the sidelines and the center at the middle. After receiving the ball from the guard the offensive men may fake and dribble around the defense or pass to a teammate. If he passes to a team mate he breaks to the basket and receives a fast pass back from his team mate. The theory here is to take advantage of the individual weakness of all defensive men, namely, the tendency to watch the flight of the ball instead of the man he is covering. As the guard takes his eyes off the man he is covering his opponent breaks fast to the basket and receives a return pass before he can recover. Constant drill against this type of offense is the only way this attack can be successfully stopped.

The possibilities mentioned above are but a few of the many variations available if this method of attack is used.

Next Week—"Blocking."

24 Students Visit University Campus

President and Mrs. Frank L. McVey Entertain Guests

Twenty-four students, composing the Collegiate Club of the Western Junior High school, of Louisville, were guests at dinner Friday evening at Maxwell Place, the home of President and Mrs. Frank L. McVey. Dr. W. D. Funkhouser, dean of the graduate school, gave a talk on "Indian Lore."

The students were in Lexington as guests of the University and the Phoenix hotel, and remained in the city Sunday. During their stay they were guests of Miss Sarah Blanding, dean of women, at a luncheon at Boyd Hall.

The purpose of the visit to the University was to enable the students to determine what course they will want to take in college, so that the preparatory courses in high school may be carefully arranged. Several instructors from the Western Junior High school accompanied the delegation.

One hundred years ago Federal, State, and City authorities thought it quite unnecessary to call upon a skilled architect when they planned a public building. Politicians designed many of our buildings which were to be an eyesore for generations.

Baseball was established as the national game immediately after the Civil War. Baseball was at first strictly an amateur sport, but gambling and competition quickly put the game upon a professional basis.

Many tinted slides and many interesting articles were on display at the time of the lecture.

Among these articles were silver bowls and spoons, Panama hats, baskets, horn articles, and drawn work. The Spanish club added to the entertainment two Spanish songs by J. E. Murphy. He was accompanied by Miss Mary Grace Heavenridge. Miss Emily Hardin and Mr. Atanafil De Riancho presented an Argentine tango.

After the lecture, tea made from coco beans, and Guava jelly sandwiches were served. The proceeds from the 35 cent admission will be added to the Fellowship Fund that is being sponsored by the American Association of University Women.

erans, containing in its lineup two all-Ohio conference men, Canfield and Richardson. This Canfield individual plays center and how, giving Spooks Milward more trouble at his favorite post in this particular game last year than he had during the rest of the season. Richardson is likewise impressive, tickling the net last winter with teasing regularity. Clauser, the other forward, and McIntyre, guard, are the other veterans who have faced the 'Cats before.

Coach Mauer, his men in excellent condition as the result of ten weeks of hard work, is diligently preparing to prevent a recurrence of this close shave. Early season games are always uncertain but the Wildcat mentor has confidence in his boys and hopes for victory.

Thoroughly schooled in Mauer fundamentals, the 'Cats are flourishing among their shining work, a flashy guard offense, perfect blocking plays, and lots of valuable little tricks that seldom fail. The opening game for the Kentuckians, although a bit raw and unfinished in several instances, gave their supporters some idea of what to expect as the season progresses. The tip-off plays functioned with regularity and loss of the ball was rarely due to bad passing.

The same lineup that faced the Tigers in the opening game will in all probability face Miami at the starting whistle. Pisgah Combs and Louis McGinnis, with their eagle eyes and plenty of speed with occupy the forward berths. Captain Paul McBrayer and Lawrence McGinnis will guard Kentucky's goal while Spooks Milward will be the pivot man.

On the bench waiting for a chance to show their wares are Carey Spicer, who can score touchdowns and hit the net with equal ease, "Pinhead" Owens, with more fight than a game rooster, and Bill Trot, the "Flying Dutchman." These men are all capable forwards while George Yates and Jake Bronston can act as relief at the center circle. Freddie McLane, a revamped forward, Bill Kleiser, and Larry Crump are sub guards who may see action against the Red threat.

Young College Men
Snare Lightning

HENDLEY N. BLACKMON
(Ga. Tech '25)
Timid maids may hide under bed covers, kids yell for "Mamma" and worried power company officials gnaw unit cigars when thunder roars and lightning flashes; but to a few young college men Jove is just a fascinating meal ticket. How would you like to be sent, fresh from college to ambush lightning—encamped all summer under the highest insulated transmission line in the world and armed mainly with a long vacuum tight welded steel tube capable of catching lightning on the run, plus a wagon load of "canned lightning?"

Probably no other job is so chock-full of scrambled romance and seriousness. To study lightning "at home" means using the outdoors as a laboratory; any knowledge is new knowledge because no one, even today, knows exactly how lightning behaves. Lightning works too fast for ordinary instruments. It strikes and is gone in less than a twinkling of the eye, before there has been time to study it, leaving possibly damaged apparatus and a dead power line behind. Last year a machine faster than lightning became practical; the Norinder oscillograph stands guard for hours at a time and automatically records happenings during one-tenth millionth of a second or less—the time taken by a high power rifle bullet to travel the thickness of two hairs. Using this device, lightning draws a picture of itself, showing when it arrived, how fast it grew, how it behaved, its maximum value, how it died away and when it vanished. With such complete information as to the life and habits of lightning, design engineers can for the first time scientifically combat it. Then may come cheaper electric power, made possible by "super power," or nationwide interconnection of transmission lines, impregnable to lightning.

Graduates on this job, who used to be awakened by the 8:00 bell at the Alma Mater and make an 8:05 class, find such early training mighty helpful when unexpected storms come in the middle of the night. The first surge, descending upon the sleeping camp, rings an alarm bell. Lights flash, men scamper to their posts, buttons are pushed, switches closed, meters read and in a few minutes all is ready along the transmission line. Substituting for the fisherman's cork, the bell rings every time a surge makes a picture of itself, and the operator turns the film.

Few young engineers have ever been entrusted with such expensive and unusual apparatus as given these lightning hunters. The mainstay of the crusade is the odd looking Norinder catode ray oscillograph which sketches lightning shock in terms of millions of volts and millions of a second. No mechanical device could act so fast, so the moving part is a beam of cathode rays, working in a vacuum, which are bent here and there by electric attraction, tracing their course on the photograph film. The latest type of Norinder oscillograph is equipped with magnetic focusing of the cathode ray and an electron filter for matching the slower moving electrons from the cathode beam to prevent film fogging. The oscillograph husing, made of welded steel plates and tubes, has insulating porcelain bushings soldered directly to the steel shell. Other interesting apparatus are the klydonographs for getting wholesale transient data for many miles along the transmission line; Osilos for locating where the lightning stroke occurred, and "fish eye" cameras for photographing the entire sky when lightning flashes. All these devices contributed to the successful campaign this year.

Last year sentinels watched in the Tennessee mountains for lightning which came or not as it chose. This summer young engineers took the offensive between Nature's outbursts and let loose a million or so volts of homemade lightning, to see what would happen when the artificial thunderbolt hits the unenergized 220 Kv. New Jersey line, the highest insulated line in the country. For the first time a complete laboratory for the production and study of lightning has been put on wheels; the mobile lightning generator can hurl a million or two million volt surge at the transmission line at will, and the results studied.

Not all young engineers glue themselves to a desk with a smoking clip-stick for a companion—some go gunnin' for Jove.

Ag College Takes
Honors at Chicago

The University was again in the limelight at the International Live Stock Exposition in Chicago, where the Experiment flock and herd captured several high prizes, including a championship and a reserve championship.

The University flock contained the champion Cheviot and the reserve championship Shropshire, and winners of several first, second, third, and fourth places in a great sheep show representing all the United States and Canada. Three fat steers which the University sent to Chicago won third and fourth in a big ring of grade steers under a year old, and eighth in a big ring of yearling steers.

Other high placings made by the University flock consisted of first on a Cheviot lamb, a Shropshire yearling and a pen of Cheviot lambs, second and fourth on yearling Cheviot wethers, third on a pen of cross-bred yearling wethers and a Hampshire yearling wether, fourth on a Southdown lamb and a pen of Southdown lambs, and fifth on a Southdown wether lamb.

The Kentucky flock accomplished a feat never before seen at the great international show. The yearling that was made reserve champion of the Shropshire breed this year was reserved grand champion of all breeds last year. It is the first time that a high winning lamb had been returned to win a top place a year later as a yearling.

The University sent 26 sheep to the International. They were brought to show from Harold Barber, Experiment Station shepherd, who has 14 many Kentucky winners at the Chicago show, including the grand champion and reserve grand champion sheep last year. The cattle were furnished by John Freser, Experiment Station herdsman.

PROFESSORS ARE JUDGES

Sulzer, director of the University band and publicity bureau, have been named to judge the merit and originality of the respective jingles.
